This year's coconut tree planting is considered simple but the intention is to produce more trees. This is because the activity's primary purpose is to propagate seedlings in the Province. Cooperative beneficiaries will plant in their planting site and encourage others to plant in their own backyard.

Planting coconut trees can mitigate floods which is one of the solution that rain water coming from mountains can reduce floods in the area.

The tree planting is part of the environmental protection program and preserving the natural resources and increase income and livelihood of the people "for a better tomorrow."
